U.S. Automakers Statement on USTR Review of USMCA

WASHINGTON, D.C. - American Automotive Policy Council President Matt Blunt today issued the following statement after testifying before the USTR on the agency's review of the USMCA:

"The USMCA remains the most vital trade agreement for America's automakers, enabling global competitiveness and spurring more than $210 billion in U.S. automotive investment since its implementation. Recent tariff agreements with non-North American partners underscore the need to restore and strengthen the USMCA advantages. The agreement's strong rules of origin have driven major increases in U.S. automotive investment, production, and employment, contributing significantly to U.S. economic security. As the Joint Review moves forward, AAPC urges the administration to preserve the core structure of the USMCA while pursuing targeted refinements, adequate transition periods, and measures that further incentivize North American supply chain resilience. We look forward to working with USTR to ensure the USMCA continues to bolster North American competitiveness and sustain the growth of American auto jobs."

The American Automotive Policy Council (AAPC) represents American Automakers Ford Motor Company, General Motors Company and Stellantis. AAPC is a Washington, D.C. association representing the common public policy interests of its member companies.
